Conference Presentation

The potential of painting: unlocking Disenfranchised Grief for people living with dementia

Liggett, S. and Jones, M

This is a presentation given at the 1st European Association for Health Information and Libraries (EAHIL) Conference, 9-13 July 2018, Cardiff, UK.

Copyright of the author(s). Reproduced here with their permission and the permission of the conference organisers.

Recommended citation:

The potential of painting: unlocking Disenfranchised Grief for people living dementia

Susan Liggett & Megan Wyatt
Abstract

- Painting and communication.
- Unlock disenfranchised grief for people living with dementia.

Key Findings

Experiences of illness, crisis and loss were captured to create new understandings and models of engagement through art for people living with dementia and their carers.
Introduction

Within the United Kingdom, dementia presents as a huge health care challenge with currently 850,000 people living with the disease in the UK.

Without significant research and intervention, this will have doubled in the UK to one million by 2025 and by 2051 will have doubled again.(Alzheimer’s Society, 2014).

Disenfranchised Grief and people living with Dementia

Thompson and Doka (2017) identify disenfranchised grief as a sociological concept that arises as a result of social expectation.

William Utermohlen, Self Portraits 1967-2000
‘Self-stigmatization, a process whereby stigma is absorbed by the individual, also plays a role. It encourages people with dementia to remain invisible and withdraw from social contact’

‘If the arts are about anything, they are about emotion, and emotion has to do with the ways in which we feel. Becoming aware of our capacity to feel is a way of discovering our humanity. Art helps us connect with personal, subjective emotions, and through such a process, it enables us to discover our own interior landscape. Not an unimportant achievement’.

Lost in Art group, organised by Denbighshire Arts, which provides enjoyment and friendship.

https://denbarts.wordpress.com/

http://ruthincraftcentre.org.uk/
Data Collection

- A loose semi-structured interview guide was utilised to gain a more in-depth understanding of the creative painting process for participants.
- Each workshop was video recorded which allowed re-examination of the participant’s behaviour, painterly process and speech.
- Observations were also recorded through field notes.
A qualitative thematic analysis approach was used to identify themes and patterns from the data.

Key Findings

Disenfranchised Grief:
• Grief that cannot be openly acknowledged.
• Grief that is not socially sanctioned.
• Grief that is not publicly mourned.

James
Poppy
Flossy
Rose
Using art as a research tool

Mcniff (2008: 32):

• How to foster more open and original ways of perceiving situations and problems
• Gaining sensitivities toward others,
• Group expression can carry us to places where we cannot go alone
• create supportive environments that inspire creative thought
• nothing happens in creative expression unless we show up and start working on a project, even with little sense of where we might ultimately go with it’.

Forget Memory

The lives of people living with dementia can be improved through engagement in art activities with their focus on growth, humour, and emotional connection rather than memory.

Implications for Practice
Museums and galleries are increasingly becoming socially engaged spaces that tackle human challenges with public audiences.
Conclusions

Research shows that people with dementia still maintain a ‘rich inner life’ (Johnson, 2016).
Thank you for listening

Illness, Crisis & Loss 0(0) 1–17 ! The Author(s) 2018 Reprints and permissions: sagepub.com/journalsPermissions.nav DOI: 10.1177/1054137318780577 journals.sagepub.com/home/icl

Susan Liggett: s.Liggett@Glyndwr.ac.uk
Megan Wyatt: Megan.jones@Glyndwr.ac.uk